GENERAL ROSE CARE GUIDE

Find a sunny spot with at least 8 hours of sunlight and has good drainage. Make sure there is plenty of airflow around the plant. Space each rose at least 4ft apart to minimize fungus problems. 3ft for miniature roses. When planting the rose in the ground you'll want to Dig a hole twice the width of the container and 6 " deeper than the rootball. Take the soil from the hole and mix 1/2 of the soil with 1/2 compost. Using Back to Nature cotton bur compost or Foxfarm Soil Conditioner are excellent for planting roses. If you have very poor soil you can substitute the soil with a high quality potting mix from Foxfarm or Back to Nature. If you have a grafted rose you will see a big knot at the base of the plant. Make sure the knot is slightly above ground level. Add or remove soil until you get it to the right level. Plant "own root" roses level with the ground. Once the rose is set, carefully take your knife and cut one side of the pot. Remove the pot by opening the sides and lifting it up. Make sure not to disturb the rootball. Once the pot has been removed take the soil mixture you have made and place it in the hole around the plant until it fills the hole up. Any soil left over can be put around the plant to form a water ring. Make this ring about 12 to 18 inches from the base of the plant. Water the rose in two times. Adding beneficial microbes from products like Thrive, Espoma Bio-tone starter plus or Foxfarm Kangaroot will enhance rooting and plant growth. Feed your roses with a granulated fertilizer like Espoma Rose-tone once a month for a healthier plant. Mulching your roses will prevent water loss and keep the roots cool during the summer. There are times when insects and fungus can be a problem and there are several products you can use.
